Boston. Architect. Willard, Solomon

The great-great grandson of Rev. Samuel Willard, an early vice-president of Harvard College, he was son of a carpenter & cabinetmaker. Came to Boston @ 20 & w/out any apprenticeship obtained work as a skilled carpenter. His archr'l interest was great & he studied archr'l dwg. possibly at the archr'l school run by Asher Benjamin. 5 yrs. later started woodcarving & carved impt. archr'l detail for Park St Church & also for some of Bulfinch's bldgs. He then did figureheads for many of Boston's ships. From 1820 he began independent practice as an architect & taught dwg, modelin, physics & chemistry. Invented an early hot-air heating device so well known that Bulfinch consulted him concerning heating of the White House. He discovered the Quincy granite quarries, & achieved an efficiency previously unknown in quarrying & in handling large pcs. of stone by invention of various machines.

Further descriptions of his works.

A champion of the Cape Cod revival. Starting in commercial work in the 1920s, he concentrated on residential design after his winning entry in the Better Homes in America Small House Competition brought him national attention in 1932. By 1940s, Wills enjoyed a second career as an author and "architectural sage" in popular press. He was less adept at designing houses in the International/Modern idiom. He died in 1962, but his firm continues today.

Architect. Woolverton, Charles E

Woolverton (1879-1934) was a little-known Grimsby, Ontario landscape architect. Advertisements in a contemporary Canadian horticultural periodical indicate that Woolverton spent a period in Boston. He and his wife, Mary Ethel Blair Woolverton, might have been in Boston in Fall/Winter 1907/08. Charles Ernest Woolverton is not listed in the Boston City Directories, however, from 1900-1909, either in the alphabetical listings of residents or in the classified section under "architects". Also there are no listings for a Mary Ethel Blair Woolverton. In 1906 BCD, a "Mary E. Blair, teacher, rooms 462 Massachusetts Avenue" is listed.

While in Boston, Woolverton worked and studied with Warren H. Manning, Boston landscape architect. In October, November, December 1907, Woolverton gave his Boston address as c/o W. H. Manning.

In January 1908, Woolverton gave his address as 15 Union Park, Boston, Mass.

In 1909, Woolverton brought "Mr. George H. Miller, a noted Landscape Architect of Boston, Mass." to Ontario as consultant in a municipal park design project.

One source indicated that Woolverton may also have worked and studied with Manning in 1901-1902. However, our search of Boston C.D did not turn up any listings of Woolverton.

Reference - all information above (except findings in Boston City Directories, which we researched) came from reference letter from Mrs. Pleasance Crawford, Toronto, Ontario, who was doing a thesis on Woolverton. , Photocopy of letter in One-Man Architect File.
